Marijuana Alert - May 29, 2018 House vote on SB 336 this week

Could marijuana help fight opioid abuse? It's Complicated

But those studies, as well as numerous anecdotal reports from patients, don't necessarily prove that expanding medical marijuana use leads to positive outcomes for the general population, Cooper said.

Results also aren't conclusive when it comes to the negative implications of cannabis use reported in other legitimate but non-definitive studies, she said.

Those studies, publicized by Springfield-based Illinois Church Action on Alcohol and Addiction Problems, suggest marijuana is associated with an increased risk of prescription opioid misuse and addiction, and actually may contribute to the opioid epidemic. Read more
